City, Place, Context > Architecture

At a moment in time when half of the world’s population lives in cities, how can the built environment respond to the new challenges associated with this phenomenon? How can architecture, city and people co-exist? These are the fundamental questions that our postgraduate programmes at the School of Architecture, CUHK, aim to address.

Our programmes offer a diversity of design and research agendas ranging from design methodology, history and conservation, and urban design to building technology, sustainability and computational design. The urban conditions of Hong Kong, Shenzhen and the Pearl River Delta provide complex challenges for investigative design and research. Both core competence and critical thinking are developed in order to enable our students to create innovative solutions that are still grounded and purposeful.

Think, Design, Build > Architecture

The role of the Architect today is to awaken a sense of wonder in the environment we live in, to question how people dwell and live together, ultimately to improve our present habitat through innovation and creativity.

The four-year undergraduate Bachelor of Social Science Degree in Architectural Studies (BSSc) at The Chinese University of Hong Kong introduces students into an academic journey via three key concepts: Think, Design, Build > Architecture.

The course forms the foundation in architecture studies, a prerequisite for the two-year professional Master of Architecture (MArch) degree which comprises the academic requirements to register as an Architect in Hong Kong.
